UPDATE: The Reach Every Mother and Child Act of 2015, S.1911, was introduced in the US Senate [6] by Senators Susan Collins and Chris Coons on July 30, 2015.

Since 1990, nearly 100 million children around the world have been saved due to global efforts to reduce child mortality, and maternal deaths have been cut nearly in half. The US government has played a large role in this great success story.

Yet still, each day, more than 17,000 children's lives and nearly 800 mothers' lives are lost due mostly to preventable causes. If you're like us, you think this is unacceptable. The good news is, history has shown us what we can do when we work together -- and research has backed it up.

We can end preventable maternal, newborn, and child deaths within a generation. But we must all play our role to make it happen!

The opportunity: A more coordinated US strategy

This week, the Reach Every Mother and Child Act ^[7] (PDF) will be introduced in Congress, calling for the scaling up of simple solutions and requiring a coordinated, streamlined strategy to end preventable maternal, newborn, and child deaths by 2035.

A group of over 20 diverse nonprofits are advocating for the US Congress to fulfill its promise to save the lives of moms, kids, and babies around the world -- and you can add your voice to the call.
